

ART FAIRS

8 Must-See Artists at New York's Independent Art Fair 2018

By Jillian Billard

MARCH 9, 2018

Cy Gavin, "Bather I," 2018, Image courtesy of the Artist

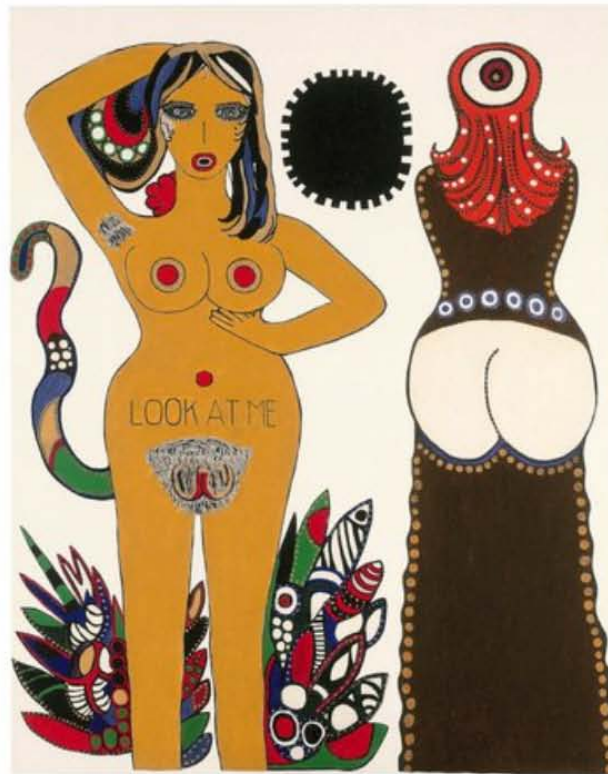

This year's Independent Art Fair, located at Spring Studios in Tribeca, presents a refreshing assortment of established and up-and-coming artists. From snide ceramic vessels to gloriously vibrant paintings, here are some stand-out works that are not to be missed.

DOROTHY IANNONE

Look At Me, 1970/71

Air de Paris, Paris

$186,000 EUR

Highlighting all women artists this year (just in time for National Women's Day!), Paris gallery Air de Paris displays self-taught American artist Dorothy Iannone's 1970 painting Look at Me. Now 84 years old, the artist has been making erotic paintings, art books, and sculptures since the 1960s. Like many women artists "forgotten" by history, she is just now receiving the acclaim she deserves. In 2009, Iannone had her first solo exhibition in a US institution at New York's The New Museum. Since then she has had shows at a number of galleries internationally including Anton Kern Gallery, Peres Projects in L.A., and Camden Arts Centre in London. Inspired by Japanese woodcuts, Byzantine mosaics, and Indian erotic paintings; Iannone's figures flaunt their sexual prowess with strength and grace.